The Rail that Fails

Pricey downtown streetcars like Detroit’s QLine underperform as transit—and can undermine overall mobility. But that isn’t stopping city after city from building new lines. Read more here.

Would congestion pricing work to reduce traffic in Los Angeles?

From pollution to frustration, the toll of dealing with L.A. traffic is high, but would you be willing to pay a toll in the form of congestion pricing to reduce it? Read more here.

LA Comotion
Be at the Heart of the Mobility Renovation
November 15-19, 2017
Los Angeles Arts District

LA CoMotion is on the lookout for motivated volunteers available to help during the event. LA CoMotion is a unique five-day event bringing together the global leaders of the urban mobility revolution. Academics, innovators, industry and policy leaders will meet to discuss these topics. The event will open up to the general public on the weekend of November 18-19, as it is essential that Angelenos take part in this critical conversation. This will be an unparalleled event happening in the Arts District’s Colyton Street, notably the Container Yard, the Architecture and Design Museum and the Los Angeles Cleantech Incubator.

The presence and assistance of the volunteers are decisive in making LA CoMotion run smoothly. On-the-ground responsibilities will include assisting with media/communication tasks, event logistics, orienting guests, workshop facilitation etc. This is a great opportunity to hear some of the leading global actors in the mobility sector.

To sign up or if you have any questions, please contact Lucas at lsnaije@lacomotion.com

Looking for People to Test the Next Version of Go Metro App

After launching the new Metro website earlier this year, the goal was to have everything that uses Metro data on the same platform to help riders get consistent responses from the same set of tools. Metro would like to encourage riders to test the new app.

You can send feedback through the app or directly to Metro at webmaster@metro.net.
